Vocational Schools in Indonesian contexts are expected to contribute to the demography bonus in which people in a productive age dominate the country. Vocational schools are supposed to produce productive young people for they are focusing on particular practical skills based on their majors. As the improvement of vocational schools becomes the Indonesian government's concern, the importance of teacher professional development to enhance the professional growth of vocational English teachers is undeniable. Vocational English teachers support and prepare students to compete in the globalized world. This study aimed to delve into the implementation of teacher professional development. The participants of this study were two English teachers from state vocational high schools in Yogyakarta.

The objectives of this study are to unravel two research problems: 1) What are the factors influencing vocational English teachers' participation in teacher professional development? 2) How do vocational English teachers implement teacher professional development?

This study was a case study that employed a qualitative approach. A case study was selected because the researcher conducted an in-depth study of teacher professional development implementation. In gaining the data, the researcher used questionnaires, interviews, and classroom observations for the triangulation.

The results of the study exhibit that vocational English teachers' participation in teacher professional development is influenced by two factors: personal beliefs and communities. Furthermore, vocational English teachers implement teacher professional development inside and outside the classroom. The characteristics of teacher professional development perceived by the participants are also explored in this study. Those characteristics of teacher professional development are 1) focusing on the content, 2) incorporating active learning and models of effective practice, 3) supporting collaboration, 4) offering coaching and expert support.

In conclusion, vocational English teachers need teacher professional development to grow their professionalism. In addition, personal beliefs and communities promote great influences in the participation of teacher professional development. The researcher encourages further inquiries related to the impacts of teacher professional development to students. Moreover, future studies can explore more motives in implementing teacher professional development.
