ABSTRACT

This study aims to understand resilience on penghayat kepercayaan in dealing with the phenomenon of the tidal recognition of ancestral religions in Indonesia. Informants in this study were determined based on the criteria of the research objective, adherents of belief aged over 45 years, lived in Yogyakarta, and experienced the phenomenon of up and down recognition of ancestral religions. Informants consist of 3 people. This study uses a qualitative approach with data analysis using thematic analysis (TA). Data were collected through semi-structured in-depth interviews individually. This study then found the main theme of 'negotiation' through inductive analysis and the findings of deductive analysis as follows: a description of the context, events, and resilience of the informants, as well as personal features and the evaluation process carried out by the informants. Personal features that were found include: experiences, skills, interaction, relationships and human capital. Meanwhile, the evaluation process carried out emerged through the following aspects: evidence, appropriateness, group thinking, experiences, fairness and expectations. The results of this study indicate that the personal features possessed and the evaluation process carried out by informants are able to help informants develop resilience.
